A TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Men Frezen to Death on a Schooner.

It is impossible as yet to estimate the number of lives lost in the river and bay on Saturday. Accounts have already reached the city of men frozen to death some distance down the river, and quite a large number of oyster-dredgers have been severely frostbitten. One of the most terrible accidents caused by the intense cold was the freezing to death, off Little Hawkins Point, of three hands of the oyster-schooner Ann Eliza, and the serious injury of the balance of the crew, which numbered in all seven men. The vessel, which is owned by Mrs. Jacob Roberts, residing on Eastern avenue near President street, in this city, had left Baltimore at the beginning of last week for Ches- great. ter river to dredge for oysters. The hands on board the schooner were Captain Oliver, Edward McNeal, George and David Tagler,

Jacob Sauer, Martin Bayley, and John Brown. They remained in Chester river until Friday night, and at 4 o'clock on Satof forty miles an hour, and pieces of ice began to be encountered. At Little Hawkins Point the schooner became disabled. and to their great astonishment the crew discovered that they were

IN THE MIDST OF ICE.

Unable to make any progress on their journey to Baltimore, they decided to wait until daybreak in the hope that some vessel sailing in the neighborhood would notice their helplessness and come to their aid. The captain and several of the hands then repaired to the cabin to take a few hours' rest, but only to find it filled with water to such an extent as to make it impossible for them to remain in the room with any degree of comfort. The water continued rising until it had attained a height of three or four feet. The men, who naturally became disheartened at this second unpleasant incident on their journey, returned to the deck waiting, but in vain, for some hospitable vessel to extricate them from their perilous position. At daybreak the cartain began showing signals of distress, which were continued during the whole day. At night the signals were repeated, but no vessel hove in sight. The dredgers were not prepared for cold weather, and were but lightly clad. Exposed as they were to the bitter frost all day, and having in prospect also a night of suffering, they laid themselves down on the deck, losing all courage and hope of delivery, and, as one of them stated, hourly expecting their death. One of their number was kept in charge, with orders to continue to signal for help. At night the captain, seeing that all further efforts were in vain, procured a yawl-boat, and, with Mate McNeal, proceeded on shore, taking with him an axe and a piece of meat. They succeeded in cutting a passage through the ice and reaching the shore with great difficulty. Procuring some wood, they attempted to build a fire, but their hands were so benumbed with cold that one hour and a half had passed before they succeeded in making a blaze. Oliver and McNeal enjoyed the fire after their privations on the boat, and laid down to a few hours' slumber.

Those left behind in the schooner endured the cold as best they could. Midnight on Saturday had arrived, but there was not the remotest hope that any cember 9.—During a gale of wind here this Everything at low prices. aid would reach them before morning. To afternoon the roof of the house of Mr. be sure, the signals of distress were given, but how could they expect assistance when escape Mr. Marion and his five-year-old for $2.50, and GAITER for $2.50, and degree the respect to the research of the the large fleet that ply our river could reach was severely injured. them or extend to them a helping hand. Icc had formed for some distance on all sides of the vessel; the exterior and deck of the schooner was covered with a thick coating of ice; the men were as helpless and assistance appeared to be as unlikely as if they had been in the Arctic regions. The two Tagler brothers and John Brown were the only men on board who, in spite of themselves, retained their courage under these disadvantageous circumstances. The other two—Sauer and Bayley—cried pite-ously during the night. Bayley worked himself to such a pitch of excitement—through hunger, cold, and apprehension of losing his life—that at 1 o'clock yesterday morning he began to act

Sauer met with no better masted. fate. He, too, ran about the deck of the schooner lamenting his mistortune. The other men on board attempted to quiet him, light, when (they said) they would somefire. While thus engaged he uttered a groan | can. and fell. Knowing, how- of whom 231 were identified. ever, that it was useless to lament, they quietly sat down, praying for their deliverance from what they considered "the jaws of death." Their quiet patience and hope that "all would be right in the end" were rewarded. Early yesterday morning they Louisiana Returning Board has been scatwere sighted by the oyster-pungy Ivy, Cap-tain Price, who, observing from the signals that they were in distress, hurried to their relief. He could not approach the schooner, which was still surrounded by ice, but by the united efforts of the three men on board the Ann Eliza and the crew of the pungythe ice was cut and a passage made for a yawl-boat, which conveyed the three men on board the pungy.

Soon thereafter the revenue-cutter Guth rie, Captain Phillips, Engineer Hedding in charge, came in sight. The officers on board of the revenue-cutter had heard of the helpless condition of the crew of the Ann Eliza yesterday, and at once hastened to their aid. When near Hawkins Point the vessel appeared as a mass of ice, nothing but that being visible. Captain Price, of the pungy Ivy, not being able to take the men whom he had rescued to Baltimore, turned them over to the officers on board the Guthrie, who were then made fully acquainted with what had transpired on the

David and George Tagler and John Brown, the survivors of that part of the crew which remained on the boat after the captain and mate had left it, were found by Dr. W. I. Nicholls, on board the Guthrie, to be severely injured. The suffering men were placed in a comfortable position and properly attended to. Engineer Hedding, in company with James Valliant, boarding officer; Inspectors U. H. Griffith, G. T. Hopkins, George Ruth, and Dr. W. I. Nicholls, boarded the schooner, where they found Martin and Saner lying dead on deck They decided not to disturb the bodies, and went ashore to search for Captain Oliver and his mate. They found the two men asleep in front of the remnants of a fire, but a closer examination showed that

Thirteen negroes were arrested on warrants issued by a trial justice, and owing to threats of lynching were sent under a strong guard to jail at Anderson, the adjoining county, for safe-keeping. It is supposed while en route they were seized by Georgians, who came across the Savannah river, and summarily dealt with. There are no details. Excitement is
